Note to Mr. Riza

MESSAGES TO HEADS OF STATE AND GOVERNMENT

1. This is in response to your note of 9 November to Mr. Prendergast requesting him to ensure that a dependable system is put in place in DPA to prepare messages for the Secretary-General to new Heads of State and Government as well as Foreign Ministers.

2. On 15 November 1999, I chaired a meeting of DPA Division Directors and Heads of Units as well as a representative of the Office of the Under-Secretary-General, to discuss the possible elements to take into consideration. We have agreed on the following:

Heads of State and Government

3. The Secretary-General should, as general a rule, send congratulatory messages to elected Heads of State and Government, but only on the assumption of office. We believe that the date of the provisional results is not the appropriate time, as possible appeal may take place. As to the date of the definite results, we may not know early enough. However, if for some reason DPA feels that sending a congratulatory letter to a specific Head of State or Government is not appropriate due to defects in the selection process, it would send an explanatory note to that effect to the EOSG.

4. As a general rule, in situations where a change of government has taken place by unconstitutional means or through a patently fraudulent electoral process, the Secretary-General should not send a congratulatory message, whether or not he has formally criticized such a change of government or election. As noted above, in such instances DPA would provide a note explaining why congratulations are not in order.

Foreign Ministers

5. The Secretary-General should not systematically send congratulatory messages to Foreign Ministers upon assumption of office. However, in specific cases, which may be identified as such by either EOSG or DPA, a congratulatory message may be appropriate.

Date of assumption of Office

6. A system will be put in place in DPA to ensure that the Desk Officers keep track of the date of assumption of office and prepare the congratulatory messages in a timely manner.

RK Pls. ask DPA to reformat as draft guidelines for S/S approval.

NOTE TO MR. PRENDERGAST

Messages to Heads of State and Government

1. As you know, we rely upon DPA to prepare promptly messages required from the Secretary-General to Heads of State and Government, and Foreign Ministers upon election or assumption of office as appropriate.
2. In recent weeks, this has not worked and on three occasions we have had to make specific requests for such messages (Argentina, Indonesia and Tunisia) for Heads of State. May I request you to ensure that a dependable system is put in place in DPA for this purpose?

Thank you.

Note to Mr. Prendergast

MESSAGES TO HEADS OF STATE AND GOVERNMENT

1. I should be grateful if, effective 1 January 2000, DPA could prepare draft congratulatory letters from me to newly-elected Heads of State and Government on their assumption of office (as opposed to the announcement of the election results).
2. As a general rule, in those cases where a change of government has taken place by unconstitutional means or through a fraudulent process, such a congratulatory letter should not be sent. In these circumstances, or for any other reason that you believe that a message would not be appropriate, DPA should send me a short note explaining why.
3. Regarding new foreign ministers, letters of congratulations should not be sent automatically, but only when DPA or EOSG believe that there is a special reason for doing so.
4. It would be appreciated if DPA could set up a system whereby desk officers keep track of dates of assumption of office and prepare the congratulatory messages in a timely manner.
